MEDIATION APPROACH

Experience has taught me to do what works and not get too caught up in theory or the academic side of mediation. My goal is to get the case in a position where the parties can see a clear path to settlement.

My approach varies because no two cases are alike. For example, an employment case can be very sensitive to the parties involved as can a police misconduct case or a medical malpractice case. Probably the best way to describe my approach to mediation is to be sure that the parties are dealing with their REAL case, not the one they wish they had. This often involves asking both sides questions, sometimes uncomfortable ones. (The tough questions are asked in separate sessions).

When parties request I will become very active in their negotiations. For a full explanation of my mediation style and philosophy, please download an article I wrote for the SFTLA magazine. It can be found at the ADR website (www.adrservices.com). Although originally written as a practical guide for the plaintiff's bar, it also tells the defense how I approach mediation.

My assumption in mediation is that the parties are there to get their case settled, not just have a discussion or use the process as a discovery vehicle. I view the process as a "time out" from the litigation and an opportunity to identify the REAL case.

I work with little formality. As long as the attorneys agree, anyone can speak, not just the lawyers. I insist on civility but I am very sensitive to what the parties themselves want the process to be.

I discourage "opening statements" and oral arguments. My theory is that the briefs should adequately cover the parties' legal positions and opening statements and arguments only reinforce entrenched positions and don't help settle cases.

In my opinion, mediation should not resemble what we experience in court. Trial is always an option if you don't settle your case. I don't try to tell the defense about the "cost of defense" or tell the plaintiffs that they "might lose their case".

REPRESENTATIVE CASES

Employment

- 38-year veteran elementary school teacher with M.S. claimed the district failed to accommodate her disability, forcing her to retire. District disputed the claim and asserted it made every effort to accommodate her disability and engage in the interactive process. Settled for mid 6 figures plus mediation cost.
- Mediated a withdrawal liability under ERISA. Employer agreed to pay $1.9 million for going out of business before properly funding the plan,
- Plaintiff was employed as a highly placed management employee of a boutique industry. She claimed that her boss sexually assaulted her at a company event offsite. Employer claimed that sex was consensual. 925k settlement
- Female clerical employee in her twenties claimed her employers gave her unwanted massages at work in her cubicle from behind her desk. Later he attempted a full body massage. She had only been employed for three months. She first began taking time off to avoid the behavior and finally left her employment voluntarily. She claimed emotional distress, no wage loss claim. (low 6 figure settlement)
- 28 construction workers joined as Plaintiffs discrimination case alleging various theories, including Failure to hire, wrongful termination / race discrimination. Case complicated by insolvency of principal employer leaving Project owners and general contractor as Defendants. Confidential Settlement.
- Low 6 figure settlement for an Elementary School teacher who claimed she was harassed and constructively terminated for reporting an incident of clergy abuse in her distant past.
- Low 6 figure settlement for a Female employee terminated when her Employer perceived (incorrectly) that she was pregnant. Employer denied that was the reason, suggesting there were performance issues.
- Confidential high 6 figure settlement for a Departing Corporate Officer who claimed he was owed an additional million dollars in compensation while the Board claimed he committed misconduct and was overpaid.

- Low 6 figure settlement for a Female employee who claimed sexual harassment, retaliation and constructive termination. Employer asserted performance issues were cause for termination.
- Mid 5 figure settlement for a Night shift employee of a mass Transit Employer. Plaintiff claimed he was being intentionally harassed and endangered by day shift managers and claimed Constructive termination. Employer claimed the offensive acts were committed by peers and, if they occurred at all, were trivial in nature and that he simply left on his own.
- Settlement for male office worker who was terminated after asking to take family leave to care for his pregnant wife who was about to undergo an experimental in utero operation to fix Spina Bifida. Employer claimed the plaintiff had recent performance issues all arising after his request for leave. Plaintiff had only been on the job for 6 months. Confidential 315k settlement
- 125k settlement for failure to pay severance after plaintiff's employer assigned him duties in another company under its control He was terminated within year for "poor performance"
